4TH ISSUE

PRESIDENTIAL SCHOOL IN TASHKENT

From the editor

Dear quarantined reader, you have in your hand the 4th issue of "Projector", the students' magazine of the Presidential school in Tashkent. Our team is delighted to present our work. The quarantine changed many things, including the lives of the Presidential school students. However, during the lockdown our committed team continued to work and here is the result. To be honest, for the last edition of the year we had planned to do something different. We had planned to post the photos of the graduation event, write about the spring holiday and work in our lovely studio... Nevertheless, we have adapted and done our best to still produce a great magazine while staying home. I'm pleased to say that on this issue we worked with an extended team and I would like to thank everyone who gave creative ideas and helped us to make this issue better. In this issue you are going to read about school events, universities, useful websites, etc. There is also an interview with our lovely teacher, Anmarie Anderson. You can find the usual interesting tests, quotes, jokes and memes. I hope you will enjoy reading the magazine and will be on the cloud nine if you like it.

Narimanov Bakhrombek

Dear students,

It is the 5th month of quarantine which means the 5th month of missing you, missing your laughers, jokes, creative ideas, your voice from the radio, singing the hymn at 8 AM, and everything. While we walk on the corridors we feel something strange, the school does not seem as beautiful as it was, the classrooms are not cozy anymore. We have realized that the beauty of our school was you, without you, we do not feel that we are at school...

Unfortunately, the academic year did not end as we had planned. We had planned to do many things with you and make the end of the academic year enjoyable. However, we did our best to teach you and to make you spend your time wisely at home.

We would like to congratulate you because you could overcome all the difficulties while studying online and finished the academic year with good grades. That was another example of how hard-working and responsible you are and maybe that is why you got accepted to one of the most prestigious schools in Uzbekistan.

We are looking forward to seeing you, your laughers again. We are planning lots of things to do when you come back to school and we promise you will enjoy studying when the next academic year begins. Now, we wish you a wonderful summer holiday! Play, relax, have fun, and come to school with happy faces to study hard!

Yours sincerely,

The Administration of Presidential School in Tashkent

Anmarie Anderson

Interview by Nurullayeva Marjona

I-Interviewer

A-Anmarie Anderson

I: Good evening, Miss Anderson! I hope you are having a brilliant day.

A: Hi!

I: Let me start giving questions. What is your favourite colour?

A: Favourite colour is purple, because it equates to royalty.

I: What was your best subject at school?

A: I loved Agricultural Science and English Language because the teachers of those subjects genuinely showed that they cared about me, because I was a child that was going through a lot of issues when I was a teenager and I was very rebellious at school. My other subject teachers didn't even know that I existed. Most of them did not know my name. My class had 45 students.

I: You are as well one of my loveliest teachers at school.

A: Thank you!

I: What would you change in our school?

A: I love when young people have a "voice". I would love to give students opportunities to share their own perspectives about how they see their future, being an individual apart of this world and not just Uzbekistan. I would love if each student was given the opportunity to see that they all have a role to play to make the future of this world a better one, and not just in Academics, but in anything that they do. I would love to change every student's perspective for them to understand that the whole world is for them to conquer, and they all could be the next great innovator that creates something that can change this world, but they all have to first believe that they CAN do it.

I: If not a teacher, who would you want to be?

A: A better teacher!

I: If you had an opportunity to stay in one age. How old would you be?

A: I honestly cannot make a decision, because I have learnt so much on my journey to my present age.

Honestly, on some days I would love to be a child, where I have no responsibilities and I would not have to make life-changing decisions, and on other days, I am happy that I am an adult and that I have the opportunity to be responsible and make life-changing decisions.

I: Would you want to own any superpower?

A: Of course!!! My super power would be the ability to make everyone see that they are able to and have the potential to make anything (positive and uplifting) happen.

I: How would you solve problems if you were from Mars?

A: (Laughing) Do you mean solve problems on earth while on Mars?

I: No, imagine that you came from Mars and you got stuck at one thing. How would you solve. You do not know the earth standards.

A: I do not have an answer for that, because I cannot imagine being from Mars. I am just happy that I am a part of the Human Race on planet EARTH. And at times I wish I could do more to make it better, but I am just one individual, I can only try to make my small contribution to make the Earth a better one.

I: What do you work toward in your free time?

A: Being the best mother to my son (living in Jamaica), even while I am here in Uzbekistan. And also, finding new and innovative ways that I can become a better Educator to current and an ever-changing generation of learners.

securing a brighter future for the students that I have engaged with throughout my one and a half (1 1/2) decades of teaching.

Among a long list of other accomplishments.

I: Does life fascinate you?

A: Sometimes yes, sometimes no. The idea of what life should be like fascinates me.

I: Yeah, we all live hard times as well. The last question: What advices would you give to the students of Presidential school?

A: In the words of Harriet Tubman, "Every great dream begins with a dreamer. Always remember, you have within you the strength, the patience, and the passion to reach for the stars to change the world." You all were selected to be a part of this new era because you have what it takes to be the future of Uzbekistan, to be the change for the future of this country. This is how you make a change, "if you don't like something, change it. If you can't change it, change your attitude" (Maya Angelou). Change will not come if you wait on some other person or some other time. You are the ones Uzbekistan and the world have been waiting for, you are the change that they seek. Remember, you do not need to be the brightest, or the smartest to change the world, you all carry the power you need inside yourselves already as you are, as long as you have the power to imagine things being better. "If the mind can conceive it, you can achieve it."

A: Thank you very much for brilliant and sincere answers. I really appreciate, respect and love you as a very responsible and knowledgeable person. Thanks for making time for this interview.

I: Being a mother is a hard work. I think everyone should prepare for that.

A: Well, you can't truly prepare for being a parent, honestly. There is no Manual for that.

I: What motivates you?

A: Generally, what motivates me, is pushing my own boundaries and challenging myself to achieve things that people have said that I couldn't or things that I believe sometimes that are hard/challenging.

I: How do you think your family and friends would describe you?

A: Driven. A go-getter. Hard-headed and stubborn. Full of life and vibrant. "Never a dull moment when Anmarie is around". Pleasant.

I: Where else would you want to travel?

A: I would love to visit Dubai. However, wherever this journey of educating for changing the world takes me, I will definitely be travelling there and enjoying different places.

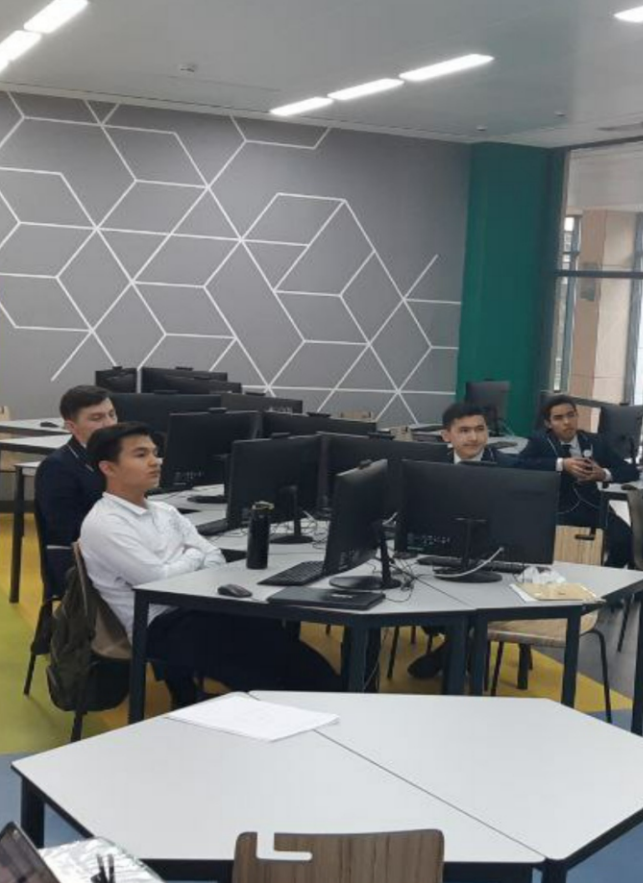

I: What personal or professional accomplishments are you most proud of?

A: I am proud of being a mom.

I am also proud of being the coach of the first team to win the World Robots Olympiad in Jamaica and my team was the first to represent the country in the World Robotics Olympiad (WRO) in Thailand in 2018.

I am also proud of being a teacher, mentor, facilitator and just overall contribution to education and my small part in

ECONOMIC YEAR 2019-2020

Article by Abdumalikova Gulirano

The largest international technology competition for girls, held in Uzbekistan since 2016.

Technovation annually organizes an educational competition for teams of girls from around the world.

Girls learn to solve socially important problems in their communities with the help of technology (they create a mobile application, write a business plan for the project, shoot a video about the project and present it in the final of the competition). The best projects get prizes and a chance to go to California. This year, we, the "Science of Happiness" team from the presidential school decided to participate in this competition. Our Auxillium app was created to provide psychological support for women who have been abused.

According to a survey conducted by us, 60% of women who have faced situations of psychological or physical abuse do not seek help. The app connects women with a psychologist (via anonymous chat), provides counseling center numbers, and a sos button for emergency calls.

TOURNAMENT

Article by Gaipov Rakhmatjon

The whole academic year was full of unforgettable events and, probably, the one of the most interesting events was football championship that could not be finished. We know that students with higher level of critical thinking and better academic results study in the Presidential school in Tashkent, but they all must be experts of any sphere and be a real leader in our society. Therefore, sports competitions help the students keep fit all year round. The school football tournament was one of the main events of the couple of last weeks in our school. Although, we couldn't organize it for all classes (because of the weather conditions), matches between 5th and 6th grades were full of intrigue and the supporters from all the classes were also really active during the whole tournament.

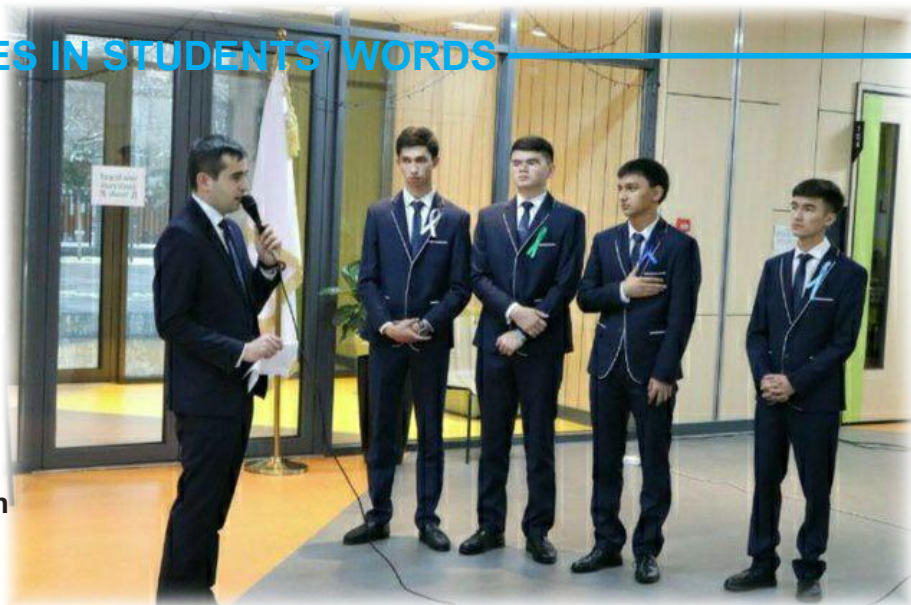

So, we thought it would be interesting for you to read about the detail of the matches. First, we would like to thank our experienced referees Maqsadbek from 9 Green and Biloliddin from 10 Blue. They both worked quite hard and provided the justice in all matches. We don't know if it's a coincidence but in both matches Blue teams were better than Green teams (it would be really amazing to see other classes' matches, we know Greens are better in some grades).

The organizers of the tournament are really sad that they couldn't give prizes for winners (because of the quarantine) but are looking forward to organizing new tournament as soon as we start new academic year and hope all the teams could attend the competition and perform as well as can!

THE FIRST IMPRESSION OF AN ELECTION

Article by Gaipov Rakhmatjon

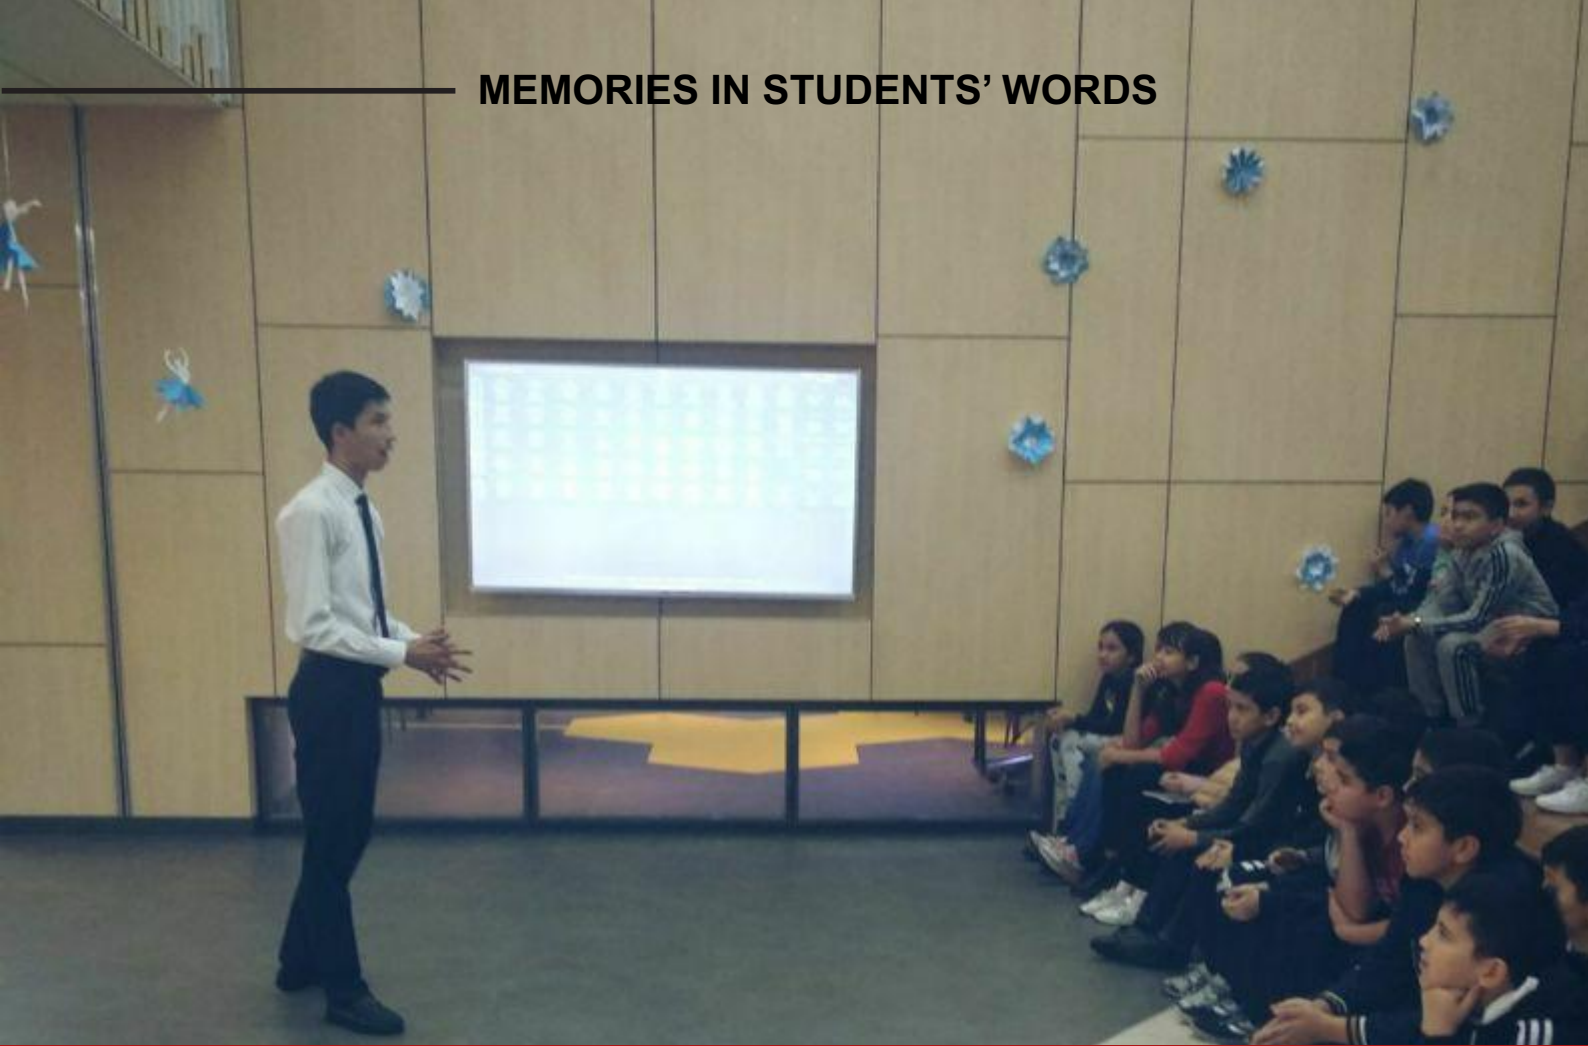

The first academic year in the Presidential school in Tashkent has already finished and I would like to share with you my experience of the most IMPORTANT event for me during the whole year. Without any doubt, this is the elections for the school president.

Everything started by establishing four housings (we called them as FAMILY) in the school and as we were the ones with the greatest experience we were told to choose the leader of the housing from 9th and 10th grades. So our family was one of the best and for the first two weeks we used our time to get closer with all the members and choose the one LEADER and two MENTORS. As we got closer the ones that wished to be the leader started to present their public speeches before the election (I admit the fact that my speech wasn't that good as I had expected it to be). After that we conducted the election to choose the leader. The election day was really exciting for me but I wasn't expecting to get the most voices. In the evening that day the results were told and, surprisingly, I was selected as a LEADER for the family (I got 12 voices while Saidolimkhon, who I had been expecting to be the leader got 11). All 4 leaders of the housings and the head of academics of our school gathered to discuss the final election in which we were told to make presentations based on topics from The United Nations Declaration on the rights of children. We randomly chose the topics and my topic was about keeping families together. Although my topic wasn't very difficult, it was crucial and that made me do an immense amount of research and we were given about more than three weeks to complete everything.

We had some ideas for presentation but the problem was how to attract everyone and make them sure that you are the best one. Therefore, we started communicating with all the students and present our strategies that we would support after becoming the president. I can still remember of those sleepless nights that we spent on making flyers for students as well as searching the Net for ideas about the topic we had. The election day was scheduled after the winter holidays which was pretty awesome as I could finish during the holiday. January 14, the day when everything must be decided. I was REALLY excited as I wanted to be elected. However, all the other 3 candidates were really astonishing so there was quite a good intrigue and, what's more, becoming the first president of the Presidential school in Tashkent and starting new history was a big dream for all of us. So on the BIG day I couldn't sleep well because of thinking too much about my speech, so I woke up really early in the morning and started to revise my presentation. After the lessons ended we started the event and I was the last on the speaker list (To be honest, I really wanted to be the first). For the beginning of the event we, all four candidates, presented a small motivational speech and moved to the main part. So as my turn was coming I started to worry more than ever but, fortunately, I had my BEST FRIENDS around me who gave the necessary motivation and I started to believe on myself. I started to present my speech but, suddenly, everything was turned upside down because of one tiny accident. The background music of my speech was stopped and I started to worry again. Additionally, all the pages of my presentation were mixed up (I didn't know that until I watched the video of my speech after some weeks later). After we were all done with the presenting part election part started and I was just about to gave up everything. Well, after a while the time for announcing the results came and everyone were thrilled of waiting to know the name of the school president. Our honorable school principle was in charge of announcing the name and he started to tell the number of votes starting from the least one. When he told the name of the pre-last candidate I was just shocked and felt a kind of strange feeling that I hadn't felt before. I was the one to get the most votes and elected as the school president. Everyone was happy for my success and started to congratulate me. I was feeling a sense of pride of myself to get this place as it had quite a big responsibility. At last but not at least this was the most unforgettable event for me, but I would also like to say that I can't deny the fact that without my best friends from 9th and 10th grade I could NEVER be the leader.

Hence, I would like to thank all the people who supported me and helped as much as could during the elections. Undoubtedly, I will never forget it!

PS. I would like to apologize for any mistake in this article and wanted to ask you to remember that "Everyone "does" mistakes" :)

HEROES IN THE SOCIETY

MARCUS RASHFORD

THE GIFTED MANCHESTER UNITED STAR WHO BECAME A REMARKABLE ACTIVIST

From CNN.com

Any English Premier League defender could testify that Marcus Rashford can be a fearsome opponent. Now the UK government can attest to this too.

By eloquently and calmly putting forward his case for free school meals to be provided to the poorest families in England over the summer school holidays, the Manchester United star on Tuesday forced the government into a U-turn.

Within hours of the government's about-face, the hashtag #sirmarcusrashford was trending on Twitter and the footballer was being thanked in the UK Parliament by the leader of the opposition, Keir Starmer. He was leading UK news bulletins and dominating newspaper headlines.

Marcus Rashford: Footballer, campaigner, and the remarkable 22-year-old who succeeded in making Prime Minister Boris Johnson announce a new £120 million ($150m) "Covid summer food fund." Such was the force of Rashford's campaign, launched on Monday, that had Johnson not changed tact he was reportedly risking a rebellion from his own backbenchers.

As one of England's most talented players, Rashford has had the ability to influence others for a number of years, ever since he scored on his United debut in 2016 to become an instant hero, but over these last few months his voice has never been louder.

If a person's true character is revealed during a crisis, Rashford has proven himself a leader; a player with drive and a social conscience. A self-made multimillionaire who has used his profile to make a difference during a once-in-a-generation pandemic which has brought heartache and hardship on many. He is the reason why families entitled to free school meals will now receive a one-off voucher at the end of the school term, worth £15 ($18) a week for the six-week school break, which they can spend in supermarkets. Over a million children will be beneficiaries.

Since the start of the pandemic, this Manchester-born son of a single mother has raised millions in donations alongside food charity FareShare, launched a poetry competition for deaf children and learned sign language. Few have been so prolific and effective during lockdown.

Last December he partnered on a drive to counter homelessness. He also recently posted a powerful message on Twitter following the death of George Floyd.

It was at the beginning of April, as the coronavirus pandemic was taking hold in the UK, that British health secretary Matt Hancock told English Premier League footballers to "make a contribution" and "play their part" in looking after the less fortunate.

HEROES IN THE SOCIETY

Rashford has forced Hancock's government to do the same.

Footballers have often been easy targets and Hancock was happy to attempt to pit the "ordinary" people against the stereotype of the overpaid, greedy footballer.

But these are young, high-achieving men, many of whom are from poorer backgrounds. There are plenty, like Rashford, who have not forgotten the sacrifices made by others in their journey to the pinnacle of their sport, memories of those early struggles have not faded, and there are plenty who are enlightened and are a force for good, such as Raheem Sterling, Trent Alexander-Arnold and Andrew Robertson, to name a few. In his open letter to UK lawmakers on Monday, Rashford, the youngest of five children, spoke about how as a child he relied on free school meals and "the kind actions of neighbours and coaches."

"The system was not built for families like mine to succeed, regardless of how hard my mum worked," he wrote, before adding: "This is not about politics; this is about humanity. It was an impressive letter from a footballer who first sought to learn more about his subject before going on to make such an impact, asking people to send him videos of their experiences of the government's food voucher scheme and how ending it would impact them. "I need to understand better the exact scale of this problem," he tweeted.

Perhaps the government did not fully comprehend the sway of a man with nearly three million Twitter followers, 8.4 million on Instagram and 3.3 million on Facebook. Perhaps Johnson was unaware that this was a boyhood United fan who had hardly put a foot wrong since making his debut for his hometown club -- not only did he score on his debut, he also found the net in his first EPL outing, his first Manchester derby and first Champions League match.

Less than 24 hours after Rashford made public his letter, Johnson made his U-turn and Rashford had proven himself to be arguably a more remarkable activist than he is a footballer, which is some feat for a player who, four years ago, became the youngest footballer to score on his England debut.

"I would put Marcus Rashford in No.10 running policy because he's an incredible guy," Conservative lawmaker Robert Halfon told the BBC on Tuesday. "He's an extraordinary individual — he's a hero of our time."

Rashford had already achieved much in football; representing his country at a European Championship and a World Cup, scoring 64 goals for United -- a tally that will only increase over the next few years -- but whatever his accomplishments on the pitch, none compare to the impact he has had in his country these last few days.

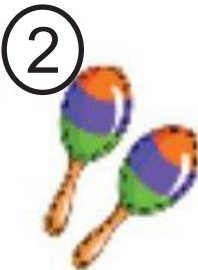

You can also scan the QR code and watch the video where Marcus explains why he wants a u-turn over ending free school meals.

SAYFULLO SAIDOV

Article by Narimanov Bakhrombek

Choosing a person to write about for this issue was uneasy because there were many students who deserve to be on the pages of “Projector.” However, after long discussions, we decided to write about Sayfullo Saidov, a 13-year-old boy who has written his own book. Sayfullo studies in 7th grade, 7 Green (will be 8 Green in September). As I mentioned before he is 13 years old and likes reading books and listening to music. His favourite sort of music is Lo-fi music. He is also passionate about discovering new things and using them in life. In addition, he studies pretty well at school and one of the most intelligent students of the school.

Let me move on to his life at Presidential school. When he began to study at school, he could easily make new friends, and he is happy that he has kind, responsible and helpful friends. He says school life is interesting and likes all teachers. He also states that teachers are constantly encouraging him to do his best and it is great to know that they are always ready to help him achieve full potential. As many of his peers, his favourite subjects are Mathematics, Science and ICT. He is also really confident in his English and immersed himself in many activities within the school because of it. He also appreciates extracurricular activities, especially swimming.

When I asked him about what was the inspiration for him to write the book, he answered “I was inspired by famous motivator Brian Tracy. He is my favourite author and I usually read his books.

After reading his book called “Eat That Frog”, I decided to write my own book.” The book is called “Study tips.” It is available on telegram channel “Prezident maktablari.” Personally, I have read the book and discovered many interesting things for myself.

Sayfullo has ambitious plans for the future. His dream is to study in Japan and become a chemical engineer. He says, “When I collect enough money, I will travel to other countries. I have always been dreaming about going to England. I would also love to travel to countries where I can learn modern technology.”

At the end of our interview, I asked him to give advice to his peers. He told his friends not to give up, and he believes that if you work hard, you will achieve your goal.

For me, it was a pleasure writing about Sayfullo and giving brief information about his life to students. I would like to thank him for answering all the questions clearly and fully and not rejecting our proposal. To be honest, I genuinely admire him as a student and wish him the best of luck for his future projects.

THE IMPACT OF COVID-19 ON EDUCATION

Article by Usmankhonov Sayidolimkhon

Today nobody denies the fact that coronavirus pandemic significantly changes our daily life, and, unfortunately, its influence to education is also noticeable. According to UNESCO¹, about 1.725 billion learners are affected due to school closures in response to the pandemic, 144 countries implemented nationwide closures - so the scope of this problem is the widest.

So, what are the possible consequences of this lockdown? And how should we deal with this problem?

Number one issue – the communication between pupils and their teachers is reduced. According to StudiEconomiciDell'Ocse studies, school performance relies critically on maintaining close relationships with teachers, therefore, lack of their attention may result in the worse performance of students.

Another damaging output of this kind of studying is inequality in accessing fast Internet and educational resources. Not everybody can enjoy the high-speed Internet surfing due to technological issues, but, more importantly, lack of limitations and exceptions to copyright does not allow students to get full knowledge about the studying subject, worsening the quality of learning.

Luckily, there are several solutions to the problems described above. And the most effective one – allowing virtual audience to get the copyright materials for free, like Australian Publishers Association did². They provide educational contents of their enormous library, helping millions of students around the world. Another organization in Netherlands created a website to allow teachers to use free-licensed music and video for their lessons.

Fortunately, more and more organizations like this appear today to support online education, and now we can deal with this unpleasant situation caused by lockdown. So, let's be optimistic, hopefully we will outlive this quarantine and soon meet together)

SUMMER VACATION

Survey by Mahkamjonkhojizoda Nurislombek

Our team has made a survey, which consists of 6 questions about summer vacation. 20 teachers (including local and international) have completed the survey. We have summarized the answers and here are the results.

In terms of our teachers' favourite summertime activity, 4 of them, which means 20% like travelling. Surprisingly, another 20% of the teachers' favourite activity is doing housework, reading books, attending courses, etc. The remaining 60% enjoys spending time with their family in summer.
